Dear Technical Experts:

In continuation of the updating of the Sugarcane Industry Roadmap, the Sugar Regulatory Administration would like to invite you to an online meeting on December 14, 2021 at 9:00 am.

To recall the agreements during the first SCA meeting last October 28, 2021, the members raised various concerns on the initial presentation on the outline of the draft Roadmap. Since there was limited time to address all these concerns, the Assembly agreed that the Sugarcane Industry Roadmap 2021 - 2040 will be a live document until all the issues are addressed and given appropriate consideration. Finally, without any objections from the members, it was resolved that the SCA will endorse to the Department of Agriculture the approval of the Sugarcane Industry Roadmap 2021 - 2040 without prejudice to subsequent amendments.

On the scheduled follow-up meeting, SRA will present the outline of the second draft of the roadmap for the members' comments and inputs. The draft manuscript will be sent prior to the meeting for the members' reference, and will be the material during the online consultation.

The meeting link will be sent to your respective e-mails. Also, due to the limited time, please be informed that the consultation will start at exactly 9:00 am.

COMMENTS, OBSERVATIONS, INPUTS
On the 14th December Consultation with SCA

1. ORGANIC FERTILIZER/SOIL PH, SOIL REJUVENATION

- ✚ The project/program on the manufacture of organic fertilizer from mill-derived products such as filter cake, mill ash, bagasse, etc. is laudable and timely, even as similar activities have been launched before, with the SRA assisting mill districts putting up organic fertilizer processing plants. Along with other interventions which would be beneficial to the development of the mill districts, this program/project should rank high in priority (Ka Lito)
- ✚ Mudpress, or filter cake per se, cannot be applied in its fresh form, and should take several months until it could be beneficial to the field (Mr Lobregat), as organic matter supplement, or to improve soil tilth or workability. Even if processed into organic fertilizer, which would facilitate the stabilization time required, the nutrient content would still be very low compared to chemical fertilizers, thus requiring very big volumes for application in the fields (additional cost of transport and application). This is why the medium must be “spiked” with nutrients, N-P-K until such levels be more acceptable as alternative soil ameliorant (Ka Lito).
- ✚ The available Soil PH Maps presented (almost 10 years old-- 2012, 2013) only justify the need for the liming program. Other districts must make initial activities toward this end, like soil sampling and analysis (FHCorpuz)
- ✚ Admin. Gina and Ka Lito observed that the soil acidity problem has been identified much earlier before, but why does it seem to elicit no or little intervention, what has been done? Well, for one, this reporter has always contended that such program would require very large amount of funding which only a national program can address. Additionally, some planters are not practically sold to the idea, no matter how obviously beneficial it is due to conflicts in the tenurial nature of the farms.

2. DATA REQUIREMENT COMPLETION BY MILL DISTRICTS

- ✚ Going down to the mill district levels in order to sort out all the data/information requirement of the Road Map is a very good undertaking albeit time and resource consuming.
- ✚ On SWOT – One STRENGTH that the districts could possess is the presence of more than one sugar mill or factory that uses cane as raw material. This will promote a competitive atmosphere which is always good for business, and keep the planters from being held captive by policies when only one mill is operating in the district.

Another STRENGTH would be the presence of logistics source in the vicinity, such as power, lime mines, manpower, consumer centers, etc.

The lay of the land, its flatness so as to afford mechanization could also be one advantage (such as in Pampanga and Tarlac)

3. COMPRESSED MILLING SCHEDULE (Admin Serafica)

- ✚ The progress of sugar cane ripening/cane quality throughout the milling season, if plotted on a line graph, is characterized by a "bell curve", i.e., starting out low, then rising up until it reaches a plateau, then proceeds to go down towards the end of the season. To "compress" the milling schedule is to fit the milling months well inside this bell curve, avoiding much of the initial rising and latter falling of the curve, and take advantage in milling when the cane quality/ripening is at its best levels.
- ✚ As the weather would be a game-changer (due to climate change) in this grand plan, it will help to cluster mills within the same climate belt wherein which to implement such milling season compression, and a workshop towards this end should be conducted on each of the clusters formed. This will be quite a big activity and maximum consultation with all sectors involved must be undertaken.
- ✚ Thailand's "knife-to-knife" time (cut-to-crush time, in other sugarcane industries) is definitely much shorter than here in the Philippines mainly due to the relative size of its sugar mills compared to ours. The efficiency of the transport system also becomes a factor in this. With the great majority of Philippine sugarcane farms being small, these planters mostly depend on the mill to provide them with the reparto or cane hauling trucks; additionally, the small planters also depend on imported manual harvest workers, which has become a big industry problem of late, which also largely affects knife-to-knife time.

4. MISCELLANEOUS

- ✚ The move towards the preference of LKg/ha rather than LKg/tc as a measure of the farm productivity is better, and long time coming.

Along this line the planters' focus on the LKg/tc of their canes must be shifted rather to Pol in Cane, a measure which is not affected by mill performance, while LKg/tc already takes in as a factor the milling efficiency (which the planter cannot control, but Pol in Cane he definitely has control of).

- ✚ In one of the tables presented in the Road Map, it was mentioned that there are 27 operating sugar factories in the country, and all of them utilizes conventional mills as extraction equipment. I believe, if I recall correctly, that CASA in Iloilo operates a diffuser and thus uses diffusion type extraction equipment rather than the conventional milling tandem.

5. UNSOLICITED PERSONAL NOTE (IF I MAY)

- ✚ The seeming and obvious over-active and meticulous discussion by the PSMA, represented by Atty. Cocoy, and specifically Mr. Oca Cortes, when it comes to the inclusion/consideration of industrial matters in the Road Map, is at best, understandable. They want optimum inclusion of mill issues/matters in the road map preparatory to consideration in the SIDA. And, as SRA would play a big role in SIDA implementation, they are very worried and apprehensive of the state of affairs in the office/department at the SRA which should be pushing mill/industrial concerns in these proceedings.

They also strongly espouse the belief that the milling/processing sector of the industry can contribute largely to the development of the whole of the sugar cane industry in face of the present state and future threats therein.
